It's no secret that mobile technology is advancing at exponential speeds and rapidly disrupting and redefining traditional business models. Nearly every industry—from education to healthcare—is at a crossroads, undergoing challenging transformations to improve business processes through effective deployment and use of innovative solutions. Mobility has not only opened the door to infinite possibilities but has also ushered in the age of innovation.

“ Employee effectiveness (79 percent), cost savings (74 percent), customer relations (72 percent), increasing sales (63 percent) and new product and service offerings (66 percent) are the top reasons for a business to go mobile. ”

CIONET Mobility Survey 2013

While mobile devices, cloud computing and big data analytics position enterprises for success and longevity, they also have the potential to increase security risks and create complexities for compliance and governance, leaving organizations' productivity in jeopardy. It's crucial to know where you want to go—and how you'll get there. Having a solid plan and a team of experts to support you will guarantee success at every turn.

“ About 71% of enterprises regard mobility as a top priority, and Nasscom estimates the global enterprise mobility market to be worth $140 billion a year, by 2020. ”

Fingent, Shaping the Future

“ Difficulties linking mobile platforms to existing databases will cause 45 percent of mobile enterprise app initiatives to be delayed or go over budget in 2015. ”
